All the sketches here are reproduced from my own note books, largely or from my own memory and the observations cover a period of some thirty years from the time when I first began to prowl about the home woods with a child's wonder and delight to my last hard winter trip into the Canadian wilderness. Some of the chapters like those of the Woodcock and the Coon represent the characteristics of scores of animals and birds of the same species; others like those of the Bear and Eider Duck in Animal Surgery represent the acute intelligence of certain individual animals that nature seems to have lifted enormously above the level of their fellows; and in a single case that of the Toad I have for the story's sake gathered into one creature the habits of four or five of these humble little helpers of ours that I have watched at different times and in different places. The queer names herein used for beasts and birds are those given by the Milicete Indians and represent usually some sound or suggestion of the creatures themselves. Except where it is plainly stated otherwise, all the incidents and observations have passed under my own eyes and have been confirmed later by other observers. In the records while holding closely to the facts I have simply tried to make all these animals as interesting to the reader as they were to me when I discovered them.
