

INFORMATION SYSTEMS

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

- Understand the impact of organizational structure on information systems.
- Find out about the types of functional silos in organizations.
- Learn about the evolution of information systems technology generations and architectures and its influence on silo environment.
- Know what systems integration is and why it is important for organizations.
- Understand the role of Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) systems in systems integration.

CASE 2-1

OPENING CASE:

AIR CARGO'S e-ENTERPRISE SYSTEM

Air Cargo, Inc. (ACI) is a logistics management company providing air-cargo ground services to 17+ shareholder airlines and 50 associates, including road feeder service that connects airports and cities in the United States and Europe, pick-up and delivery of regular air cargo shipments, small package air cargo pickup, and delivery of flight-specific, time-definite shipments. A major system crash in the late 1990s caused ACI's revenue to drop from about $ 170 million to about $145 million when they started their systems integration effort with their e-Enterprise system.

PROBLEMS WITH FUNCTIONAL SILOS

ACI runs various business applications for dispatching, invoicing, freight audits, and reconciliations. Before converting to ERP, ACI's accounting staff had to export and import text files to communicate across accounting and business applications. This took time and made even the most recent report slightly dated. ACI initially considered simply upgrading its existing accounting system to a new release; however, Jack Downing, ACI's IT director, decided this approach was not feasible because they had developed numerous custom procedures in their accounting and other business applications. "An upgrade wouldn't have been economical," he explained, "because we had made so many custom changes to the old software."

e-ENTERPRISE SYSTEM

ACI therefore implemented four eEnterprise applications: its financial series, distribution series, customization and integration series, and the Microsoft SQL Server. In addition, ACI used the Microsoft transformation services. The immediate effect of this implementation integrated the accounting system with the line-of-business applications, thereby eliminating manual data reentry. This occurred because Microsoft SQL Server and the Data Transformation Services (DTS) software connected to ACI's line-of-business applications and delivered transaction data to the ACI eEnterprise system. This data was used to update the financial records. Note that DTS runs in the background on a regular basis without requiring manual intervention. As a result, the accounting department no longer needs to export and import line of business records manually to generate its reports.
