 Double the Fun Animals Playing Dead to Stay Alive Playing Dead to Stay Alive Marie McMaster 3 28 Playing dead to scare someone can be a mean trick to play on a friend but many members of the animal kingdom pretend to be dead for something other than fun In nature it s used as a survival strategy Scientists call this tonic immobility When the animal plays dead it doesn t just stop moving its heart and breathing rates slow down and its body temperature falls During this kind of encounter the animal remains conscious and when the danger is gone it revives itself The most famous example is the opossum When this furry animal is threatened it curls up sticks out its tongue and gives off a foul smell The attacker leaves fooled into believing the opossum is dead and rotting Just in case the opossum waits for several minutes and then after a quick look around it gets up and carries on as usual That s where we get the phrase playing possum Other animals that fake death as a defense mechanism are ducks chickens rabbits beetles and certain snakes Researchers have even found that some baby sharks still inside their eggs can sense the electric field of a predator and play dead by slowing down their breathing playing possum 3 29 Some animals use tonic immobility to catch their prey Found in Lake Malawi in East Africa large fish called sleeper cichlids sink to the bottom and lie utterly still The fish have mottled skin that makes them look like they re rotting adding to the illusion of death When smaller scavenger fish swim over looking for dinner the cichlids wake up and eat them It s also possible to force animals to play dead For example many fish simply need to be flipped onto their backs and they will go into tonic immobility Orcas have been known to take advantage of this reaction in sharks They will hit sharks to stun them and then flip them over until they suffocate Once the sharks are dead the orcas can gobble up whatever they fancy For us humans playing dead could prevent attacks If you ever have the misfortune to meet a brown bear in the wild experts recommend that you get on the ground and stay completely still As long as the bear is only trying to protect itself this will stop you from looking like a threat If you re lucky the bear will get bored and walk off ALL+ 2018 5 5 No.162 []
