By: Duke Bozikowski

29.1:

- Behavior is the way an organism reacts to stimuli (which depends on the organism's internal condition) in its environment. Biological behaviors are essential for survival and reproduction (behaviors such as finding and catching food, select habitats, avoid predators, and find mates).
- Behaviors just like physical traits are shaped by the instructions coded in an organism's genome.

- Nervous system controls how much and how often you can learn.
- Young organisms can often learn from their parents.
- Habituation is one of the four major types of learning and is the simplest.
- Habituation is the process by which an animal decreases or stops its response to a repetitive stimulus that neither rewards nor harms the animals (Cars passing by crows) Habituation can allow the organism to be more efficient with it's time and energy.
- Classical conditioning is a form of learning in which a certain stimulus comes to produce a particular response, you're going through association with a positive or negative experience. (You get sick from food and then stay away from the food)
