

Chapter 44: Human Effects on Biosphere

Global Extinction Crisis

- All over the world, humans are replacing wildlife habitat with our dwelling, factories, and farms
- We put species at risk
 - Competing with them for resources
 - Overharvesting them
 - Introducing non-native competitors
- Rate of species extinctions is arising

Threatened and Endangered Species

- Species is considered endangered when one or more its populations have declined or are declining
 - Endangered species: species that faces extinction in all or a part of its range
 - Threatened Species: species likely to become endangered in near future

Causes of Species Decline

- People overharvested
 - Food, traditional medicine, for the pet trade, and for ornamentation

Habitat Degradation and Fragmentation

- Any degradation, fragmentation, or destruction of that habitat reduces population numbers
- Habitat fragmentation creates islands of "suitable" habitat scattered across what was once a continuous range

Threatened Endemic Species

- An endemic species occurs only in the area in which it evolved
 - Endemic species are more likely to go extinct as a result of habitat degradation than species that have spread to many areas

Introduced Invasive Species

- Deliberate or accidental species introduction: can be another type of habitat degradation

Desertification

- Desertification: occurs when plowing or grazing removes plants and exposes topsoil to wind erosion
 - Fewer plants means less transportation, rainfall decreases
