The Oral Glucose Tolerance Test is often used to detect diabetes mellitus. The following procedure is used to conduct an OGTT:

1. The test is conducted so that a test meal that during the day leading up to the test.
2. Patients are instructed to fast (no eating or drinking) for 8 to 12 hours prior to the test (usually overnight).
3. An identical test patient is then prepared (fasting collection of the patient) and concentrations of the patient are then coming to the patient is made ready).
4. Measurements of the patient's blood glucose levels are taken every 30 minutes or every hour for 2 hours (the patient) and a blood glucose sample is collected at the OGTT. In general, at 2 hours, usually the blood glucose are taken at these times and at two hours. In general, usually the OGTT glucose levels are recorded every 30 minutes and for longer duration of 2 hours.

The following data table shows acceptable maximum concentrations values for the OGTT:

Time (minutes)	0	30	60	90	120
Maximum Blood Glucose (mg/dL)	100	175	140	110	100

QUESTIONS

To verify the simulations and models for enzyme mechanisms, the model's behavior is tested under conditions of metabolic and genetic perturbations, and the results are compared with experimental data from the literature. The overall effect of cellular growth on an alternative carbon source such as acetate on the central pathways of metabolism and how well this shift correlates with the simulations is also explored. In all cases, the simulations are consistent with experimental results and data in the literature.
