

A Just and Lasting Peace After War

Lonneke Peperkamp*

I. Introduction

Wars are waged for the sake of peace. It is generally assumed that war has a teleological character; it not valued in itself but seen as an instrument to achieve a certain end.¹ This instrumental conception of war is not only firmly entrenched in history, but is also one of the pillars of just war theory. Just war theory is premised upon the idea that war, given the scale of overall destruction and death it causes, is a great evil. In an ideal world, there would never be war. However, just war theory is pre-eminently a non-ideal theory which recognizes that in the real world, war might be necessary and justified in exceptional circumstances. And although some essential moral principles are set aside in times of war, morality does apply. This way, just war theory occupies the middle ground between political realism and moral idealism, and is a balance between the desiderata of feasibility and desirability. It sets a moral standard for war, in order to limit its negative consequences as much as possible. More specifically, jus ad bellum restricts the number of wars; jus in bello restricts the sort and scale of the violence, and jus post bellum is the relatively new branch that regulates the transition from war back to peace. The axiomatic goal of just war theory is a 'just and lasting peace'.

Strangely enough, however, it is far from clear what a 'just and lasting peace' actually is. Peace is a complex and multifaceted concept, which cannot be defined in a straightforward way.² Even so, just war theorists rarely explore the goal of peace and its implications.³ Consequently, as Mark Evans points out, they might readily 'disagree once they begin to spell the specifics of what they understand by it'.⁴ This is a fundamental problem: peace is central to just war theory, but is not explored in depth and remains therefore implicit

¹ Exceptions who justify war for values such as honour, courage, and chivalry set aside.

² And contrary to the issue of war, relatively little conceptual thinking has gone into the issue of peace: Pierre Alan and Alexis Keller (eds), What is a Just Peace (Oxford University Press 2008) 1. Richmond states: 'Peace is rarely conceptualized, even by those who often allude to it'; Oliver Richmond, The Transformation of Peace (Palgrave MacMillan 2007) 2. Charles Weber and Johan Galtung similarly argue that 'a philosophy of peace is still in its infancy', Nigel Dowse that 'the ethics of peace takes second place', and Alex Bellamy 'we lack a shared understanding of peace'. Charles Weber and Johan Galtung (eds), Handbook of Peace and Conflict Studies (Routledge 2007). Nigel Dowse, The Ethics of War and Peace: Cosmopolitan and Other Perspectives (Polity Press 2009) 3. Alex Bellamy, World Peace and How We can Achieve It (Oxford University Press 2019) 13. For an interesting recent discussion of the related concept of 'victory', see: Cian O'Driscoll, 'Nobody Wins the Victory Taboo in Just War Theory', Journal of Strategic Studies (2019) 42.

³ Robert Williams and Dan Caldwell, 'Jus Post Bellum: Just War Theory and the Principles of Just Peace' (2006) 7 International Studies Perspectives 309, 312.
