Domestication and early experiences in chickens
Pia Katrine Løtvedt,2017-11-17 A number of animal species have undergone domestication the process of becoming adapted to living in captivity and in proximity to humans Common for these species is that they have all developed certain traits including changes to coat color body size and level of fearfulness This has been termed the domestic phenotype Among these traits is also an attenuation of the response to stress both behaviorally and physiologically Thus release of glucocorticoids such as cortisol or corticosterone is lower in domesticated species However the underlying mechanism for this is not yet well understood In this thesis we have investigated genetic mechanisms for the attenuation of the physiological stress response in ancestral chickens the Red Junglefowl and domesticated chickens the White Leghorn We found a number of genes that differed in expression between the two breeds in several tissues involved in the stress response Among the most interesting findings were lower expression of genes involved in production and secretion of ACTH in the pituitary and in the production of glucocorticoids in the adrenal glands in the domesticated White Leghorns We also found higher expression of the glucocorticoid receptor in White Leghorns indicating that they may have a more efficient negative feedback of the physiological stress response We then investigated the transcriptome of the chicken pituitary more closely and we discovered that a number of genes highly involved in several important physiological axes showed differential expression between the ancestral and the domesticated breed Among these were genes involved in the stress response the reproductive system and in metabolism and growth As these traits are modified in domesticated species our results suggest that changes to gene expression in the pituitary may be an important underlying factor of the domestic phenotype A separate aim of this thesis was to investigate effects of hatching time in chickens on their subsequent phenotype Time of hatching constitutes an early experience that may differ between individuals and we therefore hypothesized that differences in hatching time would affect chickens later in life While a number of studies have been performed on hatching time and post hatch growth very little work has been done on effects on behavior We found that the time of hatching had sex specific effects Hatching times in females were negatively correlated with body weight whereas in males behaviors such as reaction to novelty and spatial learning were affected As time of hatching is governed by various hormones including thyroid hormone and corticosterone we suggest that changes to the levels of these hormones could affect both hatching time and post hatch phenotypes Understanding these mechanisms better would be beneficial in terms of production where batch homogeneity is important in research on early experiences and the potential for maternal programming and in evolutionary questions on trade off between different life strategies

Vertebrate Endocrinology David O. Norris, 2006-11-27 One of the only books to discuss all vertebrates the fourth edition of Vertebrate Endocrinology has been completely reorganized and updated to explore the intricate mechanisms that control human physiology and behavior as well as that of other vertebrate animals Perfect for students in endocrinology zoology biology and physiology it allows readers to gain both an understanding of the intricate relationships among all of the body systems and their regulation by hormones and other bioregulators but also a sense of their development through evolutionary time as well as the roles of hormones at different stages of an animal's life cycle Chapters have been reorganized to more closely follow traditional classroom presentation and extensive suggested readings are included at the end of each chapter allowing the reader to obtain further information as well as connect concepts to the literature on which the book is based For the first time this edition features four color illustrations Provides a complete overview of the endocrine system of vertebrates by first emphasizing the mammalian system as the basis of most terminology and understanding of endocrine mechanisms and then applies that to non mammals Introduces the reader to suitable concepts and explanation of jargon so that the reader will be able to delve directly into the primary literature on any endocrine related topic with a background that will aid in their interpretation of new information Revised and updated chapter on The Molecular Bases for Chemical Regulation that now includes more evolutionary data Includes information on endocrine disrupting chemicals and their implications on the health of wildlife and humans

Allostasis, Homeostasis, and the Costs of Physiological Adaptation Jay Schulkin, 2004-10-25
The concept of homeostasis the maintenance of the internal physiological environment of an organism within tolerable limits is well established in medicine and physiology In contrast allostasis is a relatively new idea of viability through change With allostatic regulation by cephalic involvement the body adapts to potentially diverse and dangerous situations through the activation of neural hormonal or immunological mechanisms Allostasis explains how regulatory events maintain organismic viability or not in diverse contexts with varying set points of bodily needs and competing motivations This 2005 book introduces the concept of allostasis and sets it alongside traditional views of homeostasis It addresses basic regulatory systems and examines the behavior of bodily regulation under duress The basic concepts of physiological homeostasis are integrated with disorders like depression stress anxiety and addiction It will therefore appeal to graduate students medical
