Frame, Johnny L. Matson, 2013-11-21 One of the most important practical problems in child psychology and psychia try is the differential diagnosis of emotional disorders Until recently the gener al mode of assessment had been to apply to children the characteristics of psychopathology that were evident in adults In addition there had been few assessment tools available for use with children aside from modified versions of adult instruments Understandably this approach was controversial and dissatisfaction with it led to the more recent knowledge that adult and child problems may be manifested quite differently The third edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders takes these factors into account much more extensively than previous editions Furthermore a great deal of research on methodology in child assessment procedures has emerged recently Yet in spite of these advances practicing clinicians are still frequently at a loss in moving from the characteristics of the disturbed child before them to the final assignment of a psychiatric diagnosis The focus of this book is to outline the various methods of viewing and categorizing the wide range childhood psychopathology with special emphasis on the end product of making a differential diagnosis Our goal was to make this book unique in several ways First we attempted to cover a wider range of disorders than is typical in currently available handbooks human dynamics and the capability for generating appropriate movements in response sets the scene for higher level tasks This book provides a comprehensive overview of this challenging research field closing the loop between perception and action and between human studies and robotics The book is organized in three main parts The first part focuses on human motion perception with contributions analyzing the neural substrates of human action understanding how perception is influenced by motor control and how it develops over time and is exploited in social contexts The second part considers motion perception from the computational perspective providing perspectives on cutting edge solutions available from the Computer Vision and Machine Learning research fields addressing higher level perceptual tasks Finally the third part takes into account the implications for robotics with chapters on how motor control is achieved in the latest generation of artificial agents and how such technologies have been exploited to favor human robot interaction This book considers the complete human robot cycle from an examination of how humans perceive motion and act in the world to models for motion perception and control in artificial agents In this respect the book will provide insights into the perception and action loop in humans and machines joining together aspects that are often addressed in independent investigations As a consequence this book positions itself in a field at the intersection of such different disciplines as Robotics Neuroscience Cognitive Science Psychology Computer Vision and Machine Learning By bridging these different research domains the book offers a common reference point for researchers interested in human motion for different applications and from different standpoints spanning Neuroscience Human Motor Control Robotics Human Robot Interaction Computer Vision and Machine Learning Chapter The Importance of the Affective Component of Movement in Action Understanding of this book is available open access under a CC BY 4 0 license at link.springer.com Developmental-Behavioral Pediatrics E-Book William B.
