Abstract: This study was designed to assess the effect of a 12-week, 1000 kcal/day energy restriction diet on the body composition and metabolic profile of obese women. The study was conducted in a clinical setting and involved 15 obese women (mean age 45.8 ± 1.2 years, mean BMI 38.5 ± 1.2 kg/m²). The women were randomized to either a control group (n = 7) or an energy restriction group (n = 8). The control group received a standard diet, while the energy restriction group received a diet that provided 1000 kcal/day less energy than the control diet. The study was conducted over a 12-week period, and the women were monitored for changes in body composition and metabolic profile. The results of the study showed that the energy restriction group experienced significant weight loss and improvements in body composition and metabolic profile compared to the control group. The energy restriction group lost a mean of 12.5 kg (range 8.5-16.5 kg) over the 12-week period, while the control group lost a mean of 2.5 kg (range 1.5-3.5 kg). The energy restriction group also experienced significant improvements in body composition, including a decrease in fat mass and an increase in lean mass. The energy restriction group also experienced significant improvements in metabolic profile, including a decrease in fasting glucose and insulin levels, and an increase in HDL cholesterol levels. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, 1000 kcal/day energy restriction diet is an effective intervention for weight loss and improvements in body composition and metabolic profile in obese women.
