Christopher Columbus is credited with the discovery of North America. However, people were already living in North America before this discovery. In fact, one European explorer, Leif Ericsson, had already made the voyage to North America once before. It wasn't until Columbus' expeditions that North America was explored more heavily. Before Columbus' travels, much of North America was unexplored and unmapped.

Columbus was born in Genoa, Italy in 1451. He worked on various ships in the Mediterranean Sea as a sailor and trader. While working, Columbus learned how to use the stars to navigate, how to read weather, and even how to map new areas. Using these skills, Columbus had an ambitious goal of finding a safer and faster route to Asia and China for trading purposes. His goal was to sail west and go directly to Asia and China. At the time, the traders were using a path called The Silk Road to trade between Europe and Asia, which was a dangerous endeavor.

Before Columbus could set sail on his voyage, he needed a country to finance his expedition. After several failed attempts at convincing various kings to fund his voyage, the king and queen of Spain agreed. With three ships, he left Spain on August 3, 1492. The ships were the Nina, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria.
