Affirmative Action

Why Affirmative Action? Affirmative action creates programs in government and education that promote diversity. The people who support these programs say they are needed for several reasons. The first is the effects of past discrimination. These past actions put these groups at a disadvantage. Simply removing barriers to advancement is not enough. The proper remedy is to prefer members of such groups. This preference needs to take place in hiring, contracts, and education. This needs to be done until these groups are seen in the same way as the majority. Second, tolerance and a sense of community can happen only if we work together. This needs to be done in educational, workplace, and government institutions that are diverse. Finally, people who are disadvantaged or discriminated against will improve themselves. But this progress will only happen if they have experience with successful role models in important institutions.

-Adapted from Greenberg, Edwin, and Benjamin Page. The Struggle for Democracy. 6th ed. New York: Longman, 2003. 465. Print.
