

You should be able to:

- Cite the overall equation for aerobic respiration and relate the reactants and products to the three metabolic pathways of cellular respiration.
- Associate the structure of the mitochondria with the Krebs cycle and respiratory chain.
- Tell how many ATP are produced by each of the three pathways.
- Discuss the function of the Krebs cycle as a metabolic mill.

Describe the process of anaerobic respiration, relating it to glycolysis and indicating its advantages and drawbacks.

Review Questions:

- The equation $\text{ADP} + \text{P}_i \rightarrow \text{ATP}$ is energy (requiring or releasing) requiring.
- When cells require energy for synthetic reactions, they "spend" ATP.
- In the pathway $\overset{1}{A} \rightarrow \overset{2}{B} \rightarrow \overset{3}{C} \rightarrow \overset{4}{D} \rightarrow E$, the letters stand for reactants and the numbers stand for enzymes. Each and every reaction in a cell requires an enzyme. If this pathway represented glycolysis, what molecule would E represent? Pyruvic acid. The letter A in relation to number 1 is a substrate, and the letter C in relation to number 2 is a product.
- The first pathway in glucose metabolism is glycolysis. The transition reaction leads to the next pathway, called the Krebs cycle or the citric acid cycle.
- NAD carries electrons to the ETC where most of the ATP of cellular respiration is formed.
- Which pathway in question 4 contributes the most electrons to the respiratory chain (the electron transport system)? Krebs.
- When NAD accepts electrons from a substrate (while accepting hydrogen ions), it is reduced. When NADH donates its electrons to the ETC, (and therefore loses its Hydrogen ions) it becomes oxidized.
