Irreversibility and Dissipation in Microscopic Systems Édgar Roldán, 2014-06-13 After an insightful introductory part on recent developments in the thermodynamics of small systems the author presents his contribution to a long standing problem namely the connection between irreversibility and dissipation He develops a method based on recent results on fluctuation theorems that is able to estimate dissipation using only information acquired in a single sufficiently long trajectory of a stationary nonequilibrium process This part ends with a remarkable application of the method to the analysis of biological data in this case the fluctuations of a hair bundle The third part studies the energetics of systems that undergo symmetry breaking transitions These theoretical ideas lead to among other things an experimental realization of a Szilard engine using manipulated colloids This work has the potential for
