

Animal Farm - Chapters 8-10

1. As Napoleon takes over leadership of the farm, a new social and political structure emerges. This restructuring leads to many changes in power and privilege among the animals. As you read, create a diagram to record and compare the living conditions of the pigs with the living conditions of the other animals.

2. What is your reaction to the novel's ending? For example, do you find it uplifting, depressing, cynical? Explain.

I find it very expected, almost as if there was no other way to end other than what we read. It does not carry the emotions of happiness or sadness, but more so inevitably. The question is can we be upset about something we knew was going to happen no matter what? The novel's ending sees a negative outcome for the animals. Seeing their leaders become like the people they fought to overthrow, paints a bleak picture for the future of the animals.

3. What dealings does Napoleon have with Frederick and Pilkington? How does the battle over the windmill affect the animals? What events from Soviet history is Orwell highlighting?

Napoleon makes deals to sell leftover timber to either Pilkington or Frederick, initially favoring Pilkington. Napoleon stirs up the farm against Frederick, highlighting his cruel treatment of animals and making the case for selling wood to Pilkington. However, he completely changes his stance when he ends up selling the wood to Frederick after acquiring an acceptable price. He convinces the animals that the friendly nature with Pilkington was simply a clever tactic to get Frederick to heighten his unreasonable price. However, after this deal the animals discover Frederick has fooled them by dealing with fake money, and later invades an animal farm, destroying the windmill. The animals are able to chase off the humans, but sustain heavy casualties. This event is meant to mirror WW2 for the Soviet Union, with Frederick representing Hitler and Germany. Germany and the USSR had signed the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact, which ensured friendly relations and consolidated the territorial gains each power was to have. Germany would later break the pact, and invade the Soviet Union, dealing heavy casualties. The Soviets would eventually win the war, making a decisive victory at the battle of Stalingrad, which is symbolized as the battle of the windmill in Animal farm. Similarly the Soviet people, the animals win but at very heavy casualties and loss, almost making the conflict seem like a pyrrhic victory for them. It, like in the USSR, substantially reduces the population, meaning that not many people after the war will remember the original revolution after they have been slaughtered.

4. What happens to Boxer and how do the other animals learn of his fate? How do they come to a final conclusion about these events?

Boxer is injured during the battle of the windmill when repelling Frederick's men. He is injured in the ankle, but is still overworked throughout the reconstruction of the windmill and construction
