GENTLE GIANTS OF THE SAVANNAH

GIRAFFES

The tallest of all animals, the giraffe has fascinated people since ancient times. Everything about this animal is long: its legs, its neck, its bones and even its tongue!

Giraffes are native to Africa. The map shows where they can be found.

Giraffe populations have declined greatly due to hunting and habitat loss. Today, most live in national parks or preserves.

When the first giraffe arrived in France in 1827, men began to sport coats with spots, and women did their hair up high in a "giraffe" style.

In order to drink or to eat something on the ground, a giraffe spreads its front legs wide apart and lowers its neck.

Giraffes are herbivores

As vegetarians, giraffes feed mainly on leaves, fruit and twigs of trees found on the plains of central and southern Africa. Leaves of the acacia tree are their favorite food.

What's in a name?

The word giraffe is from the Arabic word zīrafah, which means "the tallest of all."

The ancient Romans called giraffes "camel leopards," which is how they got their scientific name, Giraffa camelopardalis.

Did you know?

Giraffes live about 25 years in the wild.

Giraffes can go without water for up to three days. They get much of the water they need from the plants they eat.

A full-grown male giraffe can eat up to 72 pounds (32 kg) of leaves a day.

Giraffes are nonterritorial social animals that gather in loose herds of as few as six or as many as 40. They do not form complex social groups.

Giraffes are quiet, but not mute. They make grunts, moans and short fute-like noises.

Giraffes are ruminant animals. This means that they chew their cud, which is food that has been sent to the stomach and then returned to the mouth to be chewed again.

A giraffe's tongue can be up to 21 inches (53 cm) long. Its lips are tough and leathery so that it can nibble on thorny vegetation.

Scientists disagree about how to divide giraffes into species. Some different types of giraffes include: Masai giraffe, Northern giraffe, reticulated giraffe and Southern giraffe.

Seeing spots

A giraffe's spots can range in color from light brown to dark brown on a white or cream-colored background. Like human fingerprints, patterns on giraffes are unique.

Giraffes are sometimes categorized by their different kinds of spots. Reticulated giraffes have an even pattern of spots on their coats. Blotched giraffes have spots that are irregular in size and shape.

Defenses

Humans and lions are the main enemies of the giraffe. Young giraffes also fall victim to leopards, cheetahs, hyenas and crocodiles.

The color and pattern of their spots helps camouflage them when they are among trees so that predators do not see them.

Their long necks give them an almost bird's-eye view of the terrain so that they can usually see danger approaching. For this reason, giraffes have been nicknamed "the watchtowers of the Savannah."

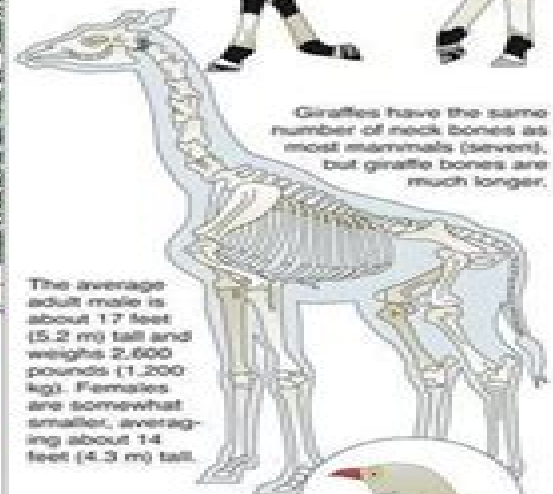

If attacked, giraffes use their powerful legs and hard hooves to stun or kill predators.

Okapi

The closest living relative of the giraffe is the okapi. The okapi lives in the dense forests of central Africa. An okapi stands about 6 feet (1.8 m) tall and has zebra-like stripes on its legs. It has short, knobby horns and, like the giraffe, an elongated neck (although not as long).

Giraffes have the same number of neck bones as most mammals (seven), but giraffe bones are much longer.

The average adult male is about 17 feet (5.2 m) tall and weighs 2,600 pounds (1,200 kg). Females are somewhat smaller, averaging about 14 feet (4.3 m) tall.

Oxpeckers, or tick birds, eat ticks, insects and other parasites found on a variety of animals, including giraffes. This helps keep the animals clean and disease-free.

Giraffes have strong legs and hooves that can deliver a fatal blow if needed. They can't run far, but they can run fast — galloping at speeds of up to 35 mph (56 kph).

Giraffes walk by moving both legs on one side of the body, then both legs on the other side.
