

ATP & Photosynthesis

Understanding that through photosynthesis plants make large molecules of glucose (as seen to the right), it would make sense that they need energy to do so. Let's review the equation of photosynthesis:

In order to convert CO_2 and H_2O into glucose, energy in the form of ATP must be used. ATP (adenosine triphosphate) is an energy molecule. In it's unchanged state it is known as ADP (adenosine diphosphate).

- Cells store energy by adding a phosphate group to ADP
- Cells release energy from ATP by subtracting a phosphate group

ATP can be compared to a fully-charged battery because both bonds contain stored energy, whereas ADP resembles a partially-charged battery (see image below).

1. What is the structural difference between ATP and ADP?
2. Which molecules are contained in both ATP and ADP?
3. In which structure, ATP or ADP, is more energy stored? Where is the energy stored?
4. Describe what takes place in the process of converting ADP to ATP.
5. Describe what happens in the process of converting ATP to ADP.
