

'The Columbian Exchange' 1: The impact of Europeans

LEARNING OUTCOMES

At the end of this topic you should be able to:

- List the ways in which the European presence impacted on the indigenous people.
- Describe the factors that led to the economic collapse of the indigenous people.
- Explain how colonisation brought about the demographic destruction of the indigenous people.
- Identify cultural changes which European contact brought to the indigenous people.

DID YOU KNOW?

In 1972 a historian, Alfred Crosby, coined the term 'Columbian Exchange' in a book that focussed on the biological changes resulting from the voyages of Christopher Columbus.

KEY TERMS

Encomienda: a grant by the crown to a conquistador or official enabling him to demand tribute from the Indians in gold, in kind, or in labour. In turn he was required to protect them and instruct them in the Christian faith.

Genocide: the killing of a whole people. The Spanish committed genocide against the Taino.

The impact of the Europeans on the indigenous people

When the Spanish rediscovered the Americas in 1492, little did people know that it spelled the destruction of the indigenous way of life. Europeans brought with them a different culture, technologically superior weapons and machinery, new agricultural products such as wheat, barley, oats (Figure 1.7.1), and animals such as cattle, sheep, pigs and goats. They also brought germs such as smallpox which decimated populations, and of course Christianity, which superseded indigenous belief systems.

Demographic collapse

In 1492 it was estimated that the indigenous population numbered around 40–60 million; within 30 to 40 years, however, nearly 95 percent were dead. At the same time thousands of foreigners from Europe were pouring into the Americas, as migration changed the demographic landscape.

Europeans were immune to the many diseases that evolved in Europe; the isolated indigenous population, however, were not. Diseases like smallpox, typhus, influenza, and measles once contracted spread rapidly among the indigenous people who had never encountered these diseases and did not have a cure for them.

The decline of the indigenous people was exacerbated by European mistreatment including overwork, enslavement under the encomienda system, war and displacement of people from their homes. Settlements were destroyed and forests cleared. The destruction led to forced migration, food and labour shortage and genocide. With reduced populations cities were abandoned and forests took over; animals no longer hunted increased in numbers.

Colonisation

The Empires of Spain, Britain and France all pursued power through conquest. They used superior technology and weapons to impose their will on conquered people and European civilisation and the Christian religion to expand the empire and obtain resources.

The colonial systems were foreign to the indigenous people. In addition to the encomienda system, repartimiento demanded that all indigenous people over 18 years provide a week's service for pay. In return they Christianised the indigenous people, a further means of exercising control.

In their colonial drive the Europeans used tricks, alliances and force to dominate the Americas. The indigenous people met them with diplomacy, and Stone Age tools.
