Mobutu's effort to revive authentic African culture. She reconstructs debates between Belgian and Congolese museum professionals revealing how the dynamics of decolonization played out in the fields of the museum and international heritage conservation. Finally, she casts light on the art market showing how the traveling displays put on by the IMNZ helped intensify collectors' interest and generate an international market for Congolese art. The book contributes to the fields of history of art, history of museum studies and anthropology and challenges existing narratives of Congo's decolonization. It tells a new history of decolonization as a struggle over cultural categories, the possession of cultural heritage and the right to define and represent cultural identities.

Museum of African Art (U.S.), 1999. The National Museum of African Art began as a private educational institution in 1964 and became part of the Smithsonian Institution in 1979. The 150 objects presented include sculpted masks and figures, regalia items of personal adornment, textiles, furniture and household objects. Each entry provides a discussion about the object's meaning and use and includes provenance and publication history. Fully illustrated in color, the handbook also includes maps, an extensive bibliography and an introduction by Roy Sieber, America's foremost authority on traditional African art.

Anderson, Christine Mullen Kreamer, 1989. Wild Spirits Strong Medicine African Art and the Wilderness explores African concepts of the nature/culture wilderness village dichotomy as it is expressed through works of art. The opposition between nature and culture, one of the fundamental organizing principles of African cosmologies, is an old topic in anthropological discourse. It has, however, never been closely examined in African art. African ideas about the qualities of the wilderness and the village give us insights into African concepts of civilization. These ideas are explored through a sifting of past research and current studies on the subject and the inclusion of related works of art.
