The government is made up of three branches: the legislative branch, the executive branch, and the judicial branch. Each branch has its own responsibilities and powers. The legislative branch makes laws, the executive branch enforces laws, and the judicial branch interprets laws. The government is also responsible for protecting the country from foreign threats and for providing for the welfare of its citizens.

parliamentarians with experience of the NAO's relationships with government and legislature. These interviews are supplemented by an analysis of previously unpublished manuscript material in the National Archives examination of NAO reports and parliamentary and other reports focused on accountability. The book begins with a history of the National Audit Office in the context of the UK's wider history. It then offers an overview of the constitutional, political and human legacies of the Exchequer and Audit Department followed by a close examination of the National Audit Office's leadership and decision making from inception in 1984 through to the present. The authors conclude with an exploration of the way in which the meaning of public sector audit has evolved over time in accordance with its wider political, ideological and material context. In doing so they demonstrate that any question about the National Audit Office's future and organisation is really a question about what democracy and good government mean in a modern bureaucratic state. Holding Government to Account will be of keen interest to students enrolled in courses on accounting, public administration, law and politics as well as to politicians, civil servants and Supreme Audit Institutions internationally. West Africa, 2003
