A Little Maid of Old Connecticut Alice Turner Curtis, 1927

A Little Maid of Province Town Alice Turner Curtis, I don t know what I can do with you I m sure declared Mistress Stoddard looking down at the small girl who stood on her door step gazing wistfully up at her A man at the wharf said that you didn t have any little girls responded the child and so I thought Twas Joe Starkweather told you I ll be bound said Mrs Stoddard Well he s seven of his own to fend for Seven little girls said Anne Nelson in an almost terror stricken voice her dark eyes looking earnestly into the stern face that frowned down upon her And what would become of them if their mother should die and their father be lost at sea Sure enough You have sense child But the Starkweathers are all boys Well come in You can take your bundle to the loft and leave it and we ll see what I can find for you to do How old are you Eight last March responded Anne Well a child of eight isn t much use in a house but maybe you can save me steps Yes indeed Mistress Stoddard I did a deal to help my father about the house He said I could do as much as a woman I can sweep out for you and lay the table and wash the dishes and bring in the wood and water and there came a break in the little girl s voice and the woman reached out a kindly hand and took the child s bundle Come in she said and Anne instantly felt the tenderness of her voice We are poor enough but you ll be welcome to food and shelter child till such time as some of your own kinsfolk send for thee I have no kinsfolk declared Anne my father told me that Come you in you ll have a bed and a crust while I have them to give you declared the woman and Anne Nelson went across the threshold and up to the bare loft where she put her bundle down on a wooden stool and looked about the room There was but a narrow bed in the corner covered with a patchwork quilt and the wooden stool where Anne had put her bundle The one narrow window looked off across the sandy cart tracks which served as a road toward the blue waters of Cape Cod Bay It was early June and the strong breath of the sea filled the rough little house bringing with it the fragrance of the wild cherry blossoms and an odor of pine from the scrubby growths on the low line of hills back of the little settlement It was just a year ago Anne remembered as she unwrapped her bundle that she and her father had sailed across the harbor from Ipswich where her mother had died We will live here at the very end of the world where a man may think as he pleases her father had said and had moved their few household possessions into a three roomed house near the shore Then he had given his time to fishing leaving Anne alone in the little house to do as she pleased She was a quiet child and found entertainment in building sand houses on the beach in wandering along the shore searching for bright shells and smooth pebbles and in doing such simple household tasks as her youth admitted A week before her appearance at Mrs Stoddard s door John Nelson had gone out in his fishing boat and now he had been given up as lost No sign of him had been seen by the other fishermen and it was generally believed by his neighbors that his sloop had foundered and that John Nelson had perished Some there were however who declared John Nelson to be a British spy and hesitated not to say that he had sailed away to join some vessel of the British fleet with information as to the convenience of the harbor of Province Town and with such other news as he had brought from Ipswich and the settlements nearer Boston For it was just before the war of the American Revolution when men were watched sharply and taken to task speedily for any lack of loyalty to the American colonies And John Nelson had many a time declared that he believed England meant well by her American possessions a statement which set many of his neighbors against him Mean well indeed Joseph Starkweather had replied to his neighbor s remark When they have closed the port of Boston so that no ship but the king s war ships dare go in and out Even our fishing boats are closely watched Already the Boston people are beginning to need many things Americans are not going to submit to feeding British soldiers while their own men go hungry But now Joseph Starkweather was the only man who interested himself in the lonely child Day after day of that first week of her father s absence Anne had stayed close to the little house looking hopefully out across the harbor for a sight of his boat and day after day Joseph Starkweather had come lounging down the beach to speak with the child to ask her what she had for breakfast and if she slept safe and unafraid Catalogue of Copyright Entries Library of Congress.
