“Thermoplastic Pseudo-rigid Composite” being developed. Early this year, Kierulff said, the company will begin testing the material in a variety of applications. The composite is made of a thermoplastic resin, which is reinforced with a woven fabric of carbon fibers. The composite is made by a process called “thermoforming,” which involves heating the resin and fabric to a temperature of about 300°C, then forming them into the desired shape. The composite is then cooled and cured. The resulting material is a strong, lightweight, and rigid material that can be used in a variety of applications, including automotive, aerospace, and industrial.
