

Study Guide: American Romanticism

In America, the period of literary and artistic output from roughly 1800-1865, is important for it is at this time that America finally found it's own voice. While the sermons and journals of the Puritan era (1600s) are illustrative glimpses into the lives of our earliest immigrants, and the speeches and "calls to action" of the Age of Reason (1700s) are rousing and important, the literary qualities of the output of those eras pale in comparison to the innovation and depth of expression during the Romantic era. Here's a guide, a place for you to collect what you remember about this period we've been exploring since the first week of February.

Group Web quests: Define the following, list important concepts, and list important people and their contributions to the following:

Industrialism:

Feminism:

Abolitionism:

Transcendentalism:

Romanticism:

The Fireside Poets: Who were they? What characteristics did their poems share? Titles? Longfellow's "Cross of Snow," Bryant's "Thanatopsis"

Washington Irving: "Rip Van Winkle." (Characteristics of the Romantic hero in fiction)
What do you remember?

Transcendentalism: Know Emerson, his beliefs, and the contents of the essay excerpts we studied. Which essays? What did they cover? What of his ideas and bio.?
