

ECM technique removes material by atomic level dissolution of the same by electrochemical action. Thus the material removal rate or machining is not dependent on the mechanical or physical properties of the work material. It only depends on the atomic weight and valency of the work material and the condition that it should be electrically conductive. Thus ECM can machine any electrically conducting work material irrespective of their hardness, strength or even thermal properties. Moreover as ECM leads to atomic level dissolution, the surface finish is excellent with almost stress free machined surface and without any thermal damage.

ECM is used for

- Die sinking
- Profiling and contouring
- Trepanning
- Grinding
- Drilling
- Micro-machining

ANS:-

ELECTRON BEAM MACHINING – PROCESS

Electron beam is generated in an electron beam gun. The construction and working principle of the electron beam gun would be discussed in the next section. Electron beam gun provides high velocity electrons over a very small spot size. Electron Beam Machining is required to be carried out in vacuum. Otherwise the electrons would interact with the air molecules, thus they would lose their energy and cutting ability. Thus the workpiece to be machined is located under the electron beam and is kept under vacuum. The high-energy focused electron beam is made to impinge on the workpiece with a spot size of 10 – 100 μm . The kinetic energy of the high velocity electrons is converted to heat energy as the electrons strike the work material. Due to high power density instant melting and vaporisation starts and “melt – vaporisation” front gradually progress. Finally the molten material, if any at the top of the front, is expelled from the cutting zone by the high vapor pressure at the lower part. Unlike in Electron Beam Welding, the gas in EBM is used in pulsed mode. Holes can be drilled in thin sheets using a single pulse. For thicker plates, multiple pulses would be required. Electron beam can also be maneuvered using the electromagnetic deflection coils for drilling holes of any shape.
