High Couch of Silistra Janet Morris, 2016-01-30 One woman's mythic search for self realization in a distant tomorrow Her sensuality was at the core of her world her quest beyond the civilized stars Aristocrat Outcast Picara Slave Ruler The best single example of prostitution used in fantasy is Janet Morris Silistra series Estri's character is most like that of Ishtar who describes herself as a prostitute compassionate and I because she symbolizes the creative submission to the demands of instinct to the chaos of nature the free woman as opposed to the domesticated woman Linking Estri with these lunar and water symbols is not difficult because of the moon's eternal virginity the strength of integrity links with her changeability the prostitute's switching of lovers Morris strengthens the moon imagery by having Estri as a well keeper because wells fountains and the moon as the orb which controls water have long been associated with fertility In a sense she is like the moon because she is apparently eternal never waxing or waning except in her pursuit of the quest she is the prototypical wanderer like the moon and Ishtar She is the eternal night symbol of the moon in opposition to the Day Keepers At her majority her three hundredth birthday she is given a silver cubed hologram letter from her mother containing a videotape of her conception by the savage bronzed barbarian god from another world If Estri's mother then acts as a bawd willing her lineage as Well Keeper to her daughter then Estri's great grandmother Astria as foundress of the Well becomes a further mother bawd figure when she offers her prophetic advice in her letter Guard Astria for you may lose it and more Beware of one who is not as he seems Stray not in the port city of Baniev look well about you for your father's daughter's brother seeks you Having no brother that she knows of does not stay Estri from undertaking the heroic quest of finding her father Anne K Kaler The Picara From Hera to Fantasy Heroine
