

2. Point the front wheel straight ahead. Turn the throttle control grip so that the throttle is wide open (fully counterclockwise) and then hold in position. Now turn the throttle cable adjuster counterclockwise until the throttle cam stop just touches the stop plate on the carburetor. See Figure 1-21. Tighten jam nut against the throttle cable adjuster and then release the throttle control grip. Cover cable adjuster mechanism with rubber boot.
3. Turn the front wheel full right. Turn the idle cable adjuster counterclockwise until the cable housing just touches the spring in the longer cable guide. Work the throttle grip to verify that the throttle cable returns to the idle position when released. If the cable does not return to idle, turn the adjuster clockwise slightly until the correct response is achieved. Tighten jam nut against the idle cable adjuster and cover cable adjuster mechanism with rubber boot.
4. Verify that the throttle control operates freely without binding. With the tension adjuster screw backed off, the throttle control grip must freely return to the closed (idle) position. The throttle control also must open and close freely when the front wheel is turned to both the right and left fork stops.

If the throttle grip does not return to the idle position freely, check the adjuster screw tension. If the adjuster screw is backed off, inspect the cables for short bends.
