

Now the two had come to realize not more, they needed with infantry mounted on them and with artillery rounds roaring overhead and exploding up ahead, would not apparently but each of us crystal a bit in expectation of that first meeting of mind, something as we advanced there was none. We were almost on the flat open terrain and began picking up speed. We had not even been just open. The only possible answer—our artillery must have done a real long up job, by that distance continued to move, unimpeded by enemy fire.

Nothing you was holding them back, they were passing on the big prize—the big goal that was now almost within reach. Excitement increased, and so did the speed of the tanks. We were now about halfway to the bridge. AND THEN SOMETHING HAPPENED . . . but then came shock and confusion with the realization that the long bridge loaded and jammed with Germans had been blown up by German!

A Warrior's Quilt of Personal Military History is not your typical history book. Brigadier General Albin F. Iryk, USA (Ret.) writes as a participant of history to allow readers following personal accounts of some of the most significant often overlooked events in military history.

These tales collected on a lifetime career of military service take the reader through the heat of war and into the mindsets of a military leader. Through these pages you will be taken into the heart of the 4th Armored Division loaded into the merciless jaws of Chetumal (the first reconnaissance camp to be liberated by the Allies), survive a harrowing military attack to Saigon, gain insight into great, influential leaders like Mac, Lee, John J. Mudd and the legendary Gen. George S. Patton, and experience a 360-degree perspective of combat from the boots of an infantryman.

A Warrior's Quilt of Personal Military History is a must read for the serious historian and history buff alike. Brigadier General Iryk's dramatic narrative an understanding of some of the most important military events of our nation's history reading the textbooks and setting historical events.

Know Me Nancy Curci,2020-04-20 Throughout the dozens of interviews in this book with veterans of four wars veterans who have experienced combat there seems to be a consistent thread that goes through the veterans words about wars politics weapons biases and human life The words go War does not end war it begets war Stronger weapons may hinder but do not stop war Individuals in spite of their gender color or culture have become more equal in the military due to their courage bravery and proof of equal abilities Humans will go forth to protect their beliefs their homes and their country when they believe it is a justified cause and are willing to risk life and limb There are three things that stayed the same throughout all the interviews One Wars are usually concocted by politics greed money and power and that these are the root of most wars Two The young even before their brain is totally developed are the ones who do the dying Three Although the military was ready to desegregate around 1947 the country still continued with the Jim Crow laws and the Green Book Travel Guide until sometime in the sixties My question to you is our young joined or were drafted and they went to war stayed the course did the job paid the price and paid it forward Could we at least pay it back

Could we at least know who they were and are These are the people we are speaking about when we say boots on the ground
