An Evaluation of the U.S. Department of Energy's Marine and Hydrokinetic Resource Assessments National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Ocean Studies Board, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Board on Energy and Environmental Systems, Marine and Hydrokinetic Energy Technology Assessment Committee, 2013-05-23 Increasing renewable energy development both within the United States and abroad has rekindled interest in the potential for marine and hydrokinetic MHK resources to contribute to electricity generation. These resources derive from ocean tides, waves and currents, temperature gradients in the ocean and free flowing rivers and streams. One measure of the interest in the possible use of these resources for electricity generation is the increasing number of permits that have been filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC). As of December 2012, FERC had issued 4 licenses and 84 preliminary permits up from virtually zero a decade ago. However, most of these permits are for developments along the Mississippi River and the actual benefit realized from all MHK resources is extremely small. The first U.S. commercial grid-connected project, a tidal project in Maine with a capacity of less than 1 megawatt (MW), is currently delivering a fraction of that power to the grid and is due to be fully installed in 2013. As part of its assessment of MHK resources, DOE asked the National Research Council (NRC) to provide detailed evaluations. In response, the NRC formed the Committee on Marine Hydrokinetic Energy Technology Assessment. As directed in its statement of task, the committee first developed an interim report released in June 2011 which focused on the wave and tidal resource assessments. Appendix B. The current report contains the committee's evaluation of all five of the DOE resource categories as well as the committee's comments on the overall MHK resource assessment process. This summary focuses on the committee's overarching findings and conclusions regarding a conceptual framework for developing the resource assessments, the aggregation of results into a single number and the consistency across and coordination between the individual resource assessments. Critiques of the individual resource assessment, further discussion of the practical MHK resource base and overarching conclusions and recommendations are explained in An Evaluation of the U.S. Department of Energy's Marine and Hydrokinetic Resource Assessment. The Province of All Mankind Stephen Buono, 2025-07-15 The Province of All Mankind is the story of a powerful idea about the cosmos. Born in the science fiction literature of the nineteenth century and maturing in the Age of Apollo, this idea held that outer space should be preserved as a sanctuary from human strife, free from weapons, warfare and political rivalry. If humanity could somehow leave violence behind as it moved into space, perhaps peace would finally reign. Bucking a half century of space race scholarship, Stephen Buono argues that despite waging a totalizing Cold War, the United States achieved stunning diplomatic successes that heralded the cosmos as a realm of peace and cooperation. The early story of space politics is not primarily one of militarization but rather of political prescience and restraint. The Province of All Mankind demonstrates that space became a unique domain of American foreign relations and international law and provides lessons for the Second Cold War unfolding over the horizon.
