Blue Planet – World Biomes Webquest

http://www.blueplanetbiomes.org/world_biomes.htm

Ecosystems consist of all the abiotic and biotic factors in a particular area. Ecosystems can exist on different sized scales, from the microscopic scale to the global scale. Ecosystems can also exist within other ecosystems, such a freshwater pond ecosystem existing inside a temperate forest ecosystem. Biomes, on the other hand, are always large-scale communities shaped by common environmental conditions, namely geography and climate. The term biome usually refers to more general characteristics, such as the rainforest biome. However, if you were to visit a rainforest in the Amazon, you would find different species of plants and animals than those found in a rainforest in the Congo. Therefore, they would be considered as two different types of rainforest ecosystems. However, they are often referred to as being part of the same biome. In general, you can think of a biome as a group of similar, but not exactly the same, ecosystems.

For this activity, you will read about and describe the different abiotic factors found in the world biomes that determine which biotic factors can exist in those biomes. You will also read about and describe various biotic adaptations that help the plants and animals survive in those biomes.

Tundra

Abiotic Factors

Describe some of the abiotic factors that distinguish the tundra from other biomes.
