

KEY WORD

territory an area that an animal or a group of animals reserves for itself so as to exclude other members of the same species

Activity 5.9: The cost of defending a territory

The territory holder usually maintains ground only by spending a lot of time and energy in its defence. Sunbirds can expend up to 3000 calories per hour patrolling and defending territory! Is it worth it?

Suggest one advantage and one disadvantage of being territorial when food supplies are:

- low
- average
- abundant

What is territorial behaviour?

Before we describe this kind of behaviour, we must make clear what we understand by territory. Most animal behavioural biologists would define territory as:

Any space that an animal defends against intruders of the same species.

Territorial behaviour is found in nearly every species of animal, even humans. Possessing territory gives the holder areas to forage for food and so increases the chances of attracting a mate. It also reduces vulnerability to predators. Animals that do not have a territory of their own may contest with the owner for a territory that is already occupied. Such contests are called conspecific (same species) conflicts.

Territorial animals usually defend areas that contain one or more of:

- a nest
- a den, or mating site
- sufficient food for themselves and their young

Males are usually the territorial sex, but in some species (such as fiddler crabs) females maintain a territory also. When conspecific conflicts occur, they usually involve ritualistic displays and rarely involve the animals actually fighting. Residents of a territory are difficult to dislodge as they are often older and more experienced.

Defence threat displays may be visual as in the colour of feathers or fur, auditory as in birdsong or the howls of gibbons or olfactory through the deposition of scent marks. Many territorial mammals use scent marking (containing pheromones) to signal the boundaries of their territories.

The resident animal usually holds on to his (or her) territory only by expending considerable time and effort in its defence. Sunbirds, for example, can use up to 13 000 kilojoules per hour patrolling and defending their territory. This is more than the recommended daily energy intake for the average adult human male! Clearly, to expend that amount of energy, the territory must contain, at the very least, an abundance of food to support it.

The Ethiopian wolf (Canis simensis) is a social animal; the wolves live and hunt in packs. As a result, they maintain a group territory by marking with urine (containing pheromones). All adult animals (male and female) contribute to this marking behaviour, particularly during patrols of the territory. Some of the subadult (younger) males occasionally mark but subadult females never mark. Direct encounters between neighbouring wolves at the borders were aggressive and involved repeated chases, with the larger group more likely to win.
