

Activity: Bird Beak Adaptation LabGoal:

To learn about the advantages and disadvantages of variations, by simulating birds with different types of beaks competing for various foods.

Background Information:

Darwin was amazed by the variation in the characteristics of plants and animals he encountered on his journey. In any habitat, food is limited and the types of foods available may vary. Animals that have variations that enable them to take advantage of available foods will be more likely to survive. We call beneficial inherited variations adaptations. Adaptations are inherited characteristics that increase an organism's chance of survival. Those with the most helpful adaptations will be the most likely to live long enough to pass on their genes to the next generation. This process ensures that beneficial adaptations will continue in future generations, while disadvantageous characteristics will not.

Materials

scissors, plastic spoons, tweezers, large binder clip, paper clips, rubber bands, toothpicks, dried macaroni, plastic cups, cardboard box lids or trays

Procedure:

1. What I Know: Write a sentence or two about what you already know about adaptations.
2. Each student will be given a spoon, tweezers, binder clip, OR pair of scissors. Each student will also get a plastic cup.
3. You are now a very hungry bird. The tool you have selected is your "beak". You can only use your beak to pick up food.
4. The cup is your stomach. It must remain upright at all times. You must hold your beak in one hand, and your stomach in your other hand, close to your body. Only food that is placed in the cup by the beak has been "eaten".
5. Food items will be placed in your "habitat". When the teacher says "go", you will have 20 seconds to feed (or until the food runs out). Collect as much food in your stomach as possible until the teacher says "stop".
6. When the teacher says "stop", students will empty their stomachs and count the contents. Record data in Individual Data Table. We will collect data from the class and you will record it in the Class Data Table. Clean up food items.

Wreathed hornbill beak was found to be a sandwich composite with an exterior of keratin and a fibrous bony network of closed cells made of trabeculae. A distinctive feature of the hornbill beak is its casque formed from cornified keratin layers. The casque is believed to have an acoustic function due to the complex internal structure. The toucan and hornbill beaks have a hollow region that extends from proximal to mid section. The rhamphotheca is comprised of superposed polygonal scales 45 μm diameter and 1 μm thickness fixed by some organic adhesive. The branched intermediate filaments embedded in keratin matrix were discovered by transmission electron microscopy (TEM). The diameter of intermediate filaments was 10 nm. The orientation of intermediate filaments was examined with TEM tomography and the branched filaments were homogeneously distributed. The closed cell foam is comprised of the fibrous structure of bony struts with an edge connectivity of three or four and the cells are sealed by the thin membranes. The volumetric structure of bird beak foam was reproduced by computed tomography for finite element modeling. The mechanical behavior of bird beaks was evaluated by tensile and compression testing. Micro and nanoindentation hardness measurements were used to corroborate these values. The mechanical response of toucan rhamphotheca exhibits isotropy whereas hornbill rhamphotheca may behave anisotropically in tension. The Young's moduli of toucan and hornbill rhamphotheca were found to be 1.0 GPa. The Young's modulus of rhamphotheca at high humidity condition dropped by an order of magnitude. The rhamphotheca exhibits a strain rate sensitivity with a transition from slippage of the scales due to release of the organic glue at a low strain rate to fracture of the scales at a higher strain rate. The compressive strength of beak foam is dependent on the density. The higher apparent density of hornbill foam provides a four fold higher strength than toucan foam. The mechanical behavior of beak skulls were modeled by the Gibson-Ashby constitutive equation. The compressive response of the beak revealed that there is a synergistic effect between foam and shell evidenced by the separate response of shell foam and foam shell. The sandwich design of bird beaks were evaluated by the Karam-Gibson and Dawson-Gibson models. The models proved that the design of bird beaks was optimized for effectively achieving high resistance to buckling when they are subjected to bending rather than uniaxial loads. The synergistic interaction between foam and shell is also successfully confirmed by a finite element analysis (LS-DYNA). The foam stabilizes the deformation and prevents local buckling of the keratin shell by providing an internal support which increases its buckling load under compressive loading. The bending behavior of bird beak in finite element analysis was successfully compared with experimental results. The volumetric structure of bird beak foam was reconstructed in 3D by a visualization technique and this rendering was successfully applied to finite element calculations which predict compressive strength in agreement with experimental results.
