Broad Bean Growth Diary:

Faba Bean: Chemistry, Properties and Functionality Sneha Punia Bangar, Sanju Bala Dhull, 2022-11-18 Faba bean is a species of flowering plant in the Fabaceae family and the fourth most widely grown winter season legume after pea chickpea and lentil. The nutritional profile of faba beans is excellent as they contain an adequate quantity of proteins, carbohydrates, vitamins, minerals, and various polyphenols. Faba bean seeds are a rich source of carbohydrates and starch. Because of higher amylose content than cereal starches, legume starches provide distinctive properties such as high gelation temperature, fast retrogradation, high resistant starch, and gel elasticity to food systems. Faba bean has been a beneficial source of protein in food products worldwide for centuries and continues to be highly produced and consumed to this day. Faba bean Chemistry, Properties and Functionality studies the global status and production of faba bean food products plus their agronomy, nutritional value, and potential medicinal applications. The agrarian conditions are studied in full as are postharvest practices. The chemical makeup of faba bean is a major focus, especially in relation to nutrient composition and quality. Chapters in this text focus on anti-nutritional attributes, antioxidants, and bioactive compounds plus the effects of processing, storage, and cooking on their nutritional value. Starch and its modification, structure, properties, and industrial applications are covered as is protein, genetic improvement, and functional product formulation. The text also looks at the future perspectives of this valuable plant and food source. To date, no reference works have exclusively covered faba bean. This book provides a much needed single source reference point for researchers looking to gain knowledge on this important plant and its use in high protein, health beneficial food products.

Brassinosteroids Shamsul Hayat, Aqil Ahmad, 2013-06-29 The entire range of the developmental processes in plants is regulated by the shift in the hormonal concentration, tissue sensitivity, and their interaction with the factors operating around the plants. Out of the recognized hormones, attention has largely been focused on five: Auxins, Gibberellins, Cytokinin, Abscissic acid, and Ethylene. However, in this book, the information about the most recent group of phytohormones, Brassinosteroids, has been compiled by us. It is a class of over 40 polyhydroxylated sterol derivatives ubiquitously distributed throughout the plant kingdom. A large portion of these steroids is restricted to the reproductive organs, pollens, and immature seeds. Moreover, their strong growth-inducing capacity, recognized as early as prior to their identification in 1979, tempted the scientists to visualize the practical importance of this group of phytohormones. The brassin solution from rape pollen was used in a collaborative project by the scientists of Brazil and U.S.A. in a pre-sowing seed treatment to augment the yield. This was followed by large scale scientific programmes in U.S., Japan, China, Germany, and erstwhile U.S.S.R. after the isolation of the brassinosteroids. This approach suits best in today's context where plants are targeted only as producers and hormones are employed to get desired results. Chapter 1 of this book, which embodies a total of 10 chapters, gives a comprehensive survey of the hitherto known brassinosteroids isolated from lower and higher plants.
