What causes earthquakes?

Earthquakes start deep beneath the Earth's surface. When forces push, pull, or twist the Earth's crust, the crust breaks. The break is called a fault. The point where the fault starts is the focus of the earthquake. The point on the Earth's surface directly above the focus is the epicenter. The area around the epicenter is the zone of the earthquake. The focus of an earthquake is the point where the fault starts.

Where do earthquakes happen?

We cannot predict the movement of the Earth's tectonic plates—only God knows. We can recognize patterns of earthquakes and predict where they will occur along the boundaries of tectonic plates. These boundaries form a ring of fire around the world. Earthquakes happen along these boundaries.

It is important to know that earthquakes lead to faulting. Faulting does not cause earthquakes. There are three types of faults.

Normal fault—A normal fault is formed when the crust is pulled apart. The top block of the fault is called the hanging wall and the bottom block is called the footwall.

Reverse fault—A reverse fault is formed when the crust is pushed together. The top block of the fault is called the hanging wall and the bottom block is called the footwall.

Strike-slip fault—A strike-slip fault is formed when the crust is pushed against and over. It may not produce hanging wall and footwall.

Why are earthquakes so deep?

The destruction caused by earthquakes depends on two factors.

The location of the earthquake. The depth of the earthquake. The strength of the earthquake.

Earthquakes can be caused by natural forces or human activities. Natural forces include tectonic plates, volcanic activity, and glacial movement. Human activities include mining, reservoirs, and nuclear power.

Measuring earthquakes—The magnitude of an earthquake is a measure of the energy released. The Richter scale is a logarithmic scale. Each point on the Richter scale represents an exponential difference in the size of an earthquake.

Seismographs—A seismograph is a device that records the ground motion during an earthquake. It consists of a base that is fixed to the ground and a pen that moves on a rotating drum. The pen records the ground motion as a wavy line. The wavy line is called a seismogram. The seismogram is used to determine the location and magnitude of an earthquake.
