By DANIEL KEYES

opinions which differ from those held by the two scientists: "Professor Nemur finally agreed with Dr. Strauss and me that it will be impossible for me to write down everything if I know it's immediately read by people at the lab." (page 47). By May 15, Charlie begins to recognize that even people he thought were extremely intelligent have limitations: "How different they seem to be now. And how foolish I was ever to have thought that professors were intellectual giants. They're people—and afraid the rest of the world will find out." (page 69). This disillusionment with the intellectual capacities of others continues into Progress Report 13 and beyond.

Similarly, Charlie's relationship with Alice undergoes great changes in this section also. At first, Alice Kinnian is his teacher, and although she is of comparable age he sees her as a child would view his mother; she looks after him and cares for him. On May 11, Charlie recognizes a change in the way he views her: "Why haven't I ever noticed how beautiful Alice Kinnian is? She has pigeon-soft brown eyes and feathery brown hair down to the hollow of her neck. When she smiles, her full lips look as if she's pouting." (page 54). This is not the description which a young boy would write about his teacher; it is fraught with physicality and sexuality. Charlie is starting to mature sexually, but he has not yet matured emotionally, so he continues to have difficulty making the transition from seeing Alice as a mother figure to Alice as a desirable woman, even though he admits only four days later, "Alice is a person too—a woman, not a goddess." (page 69).

Finally, Charlie's memory of his early years starts to come into focus in this section. We learn of his mother's inability to accept Charlie's handicap and then her inability to accept normal development in him. When Charlie's body reacts sexually (a normal occurrence for a boy of his age), Rose is hysterical and tries to beat him with a leather belt. Charlie subconsciously connects sex with wrong doing, and since he already sees Alice as a mother figure, she comes to replace his mother; in the next section, he discovers that he cannot be comfortable sexually with her. As his memory of his family continues to emerge, he sees his father as his protector and recognizes the distance which has grown between his sister and himself.

In this time, the old Charlie begins to surface, but the new Charlie does not yet recognize his existence. When he takes Alice to the concert in Central Park, he is disturbed by "a boy of fifteen or sixteen, crouching nearby" (page 70), apparently watching them. Charlie chases him, but the boy disappears. The boy is, in fact, the old Charlie, and he will appear again and again in the next section of the book.

This section ends with Charlie befriending a woman in the Park, but the woman comes onto him and, when he rejects her, cries rape. Charlie escapes, but the memory will linger and hinder his emotional development.
