Financial Accounting I - Compulsory essay due 15th November Discuss the advantages and disadvantages of financial statements prepared on an accrual basis The financial statement is a financial document used to indicate the financial position of a business at a particular moment in time. A business's financial position can be analysed into three main areas: Profitability, liquidity and stewardships. The statement is prepared at the end of each financial year using accounting basis. The Accrual accounting basis is one of them, it is perhaps the most commonly used approach to keep up with revenues and expenses in the preparation of financial statement .

It is suitable to use by organisations that have business activities involving inventory assets. The reason for this is that the basis recognises, revenue when earned regardless of whether or not money has changed hands, and expenses when incurred. There can also be prepaid expenses, they are expenses that have already been paid, but services are due to be received in the future. according to the accrual basis, expenses are recognised in the related year when it is incurred. As a result, this transaction will be recognised as an expense in the income statement for the next accounting period.

The basis also takes part in dealing with accrued revenues. If explaining in real life circumstance, say that a contractor performs all of the work required by a contract on an advance date to the invoice receipt date. The contractor will still recognise the revenue from the contract on the date of work done, because that is when it was earned, even though the payment will be received on a later date. Prepaid revenue is when the business get paid in advance contracted to do works in the future. If considering from the previous example, the contractor is getting paid in advance of the work done, so the revenue will be recognise in the future when work is actually done. As a more accurate financial statement has been generated, it can be used to predict future income and financial position.

The document can then be used in management accounting, for preparing budgets, and help in decision making. The basis als
