From anyone else's perspective her life looks enviable. So why isn't this enough? She married for safety and security. She married the good guy who wouldn't hurt her. She plays the role of super mom because she can and because she can't seem to say no to anyone but her husband. But after long days of caring for everyone else, connecting with her husband in any meaningful way feels like a chore, like he's one more person that needs something from her. She has love for her husband, the father of her children, but she fears she's fallen out of love with him. She chose this path, this marriage, this life, so why does she feel so empty and alone? If this isn't enough, will it ever be enough? What would it take to feel happy? Is that even possible? What kind of miracle is needed for this, all of this, to feel good? Why?

Isn't This Marriage Enough? guides women to find the answers to that important question and explores whether the marriage can be transformed into a relationship that feels like more than enough.
