

Additional MIL information:

- A fault code is stored within the ECM upon the first occurrence of a fault in the system being checked.
- Two complete consecutive drive cycles with the fault present illuminate the MIL. The exception to the two-fault requirement is a catalyst-damaging fault, which illuminates the MIL immediately.
- If the second drive cycle was not complete and the fault was not checked, the ECM counts the third drive cycle as the next consecutive drive cycle. The MIL illuminates if the system is checked and the fault is still present.
- Once the MIL is illuminated, it remains illuminated until the vehicle completes three consecutive drive cycles without detecting a fault.
- An existing fault code is cleared from memory automatically when the vehicle completes 40 consecutive drive cycles without the fault being detected.

In order to automatically clear a catalyst-damaging fault from memory, the condition under which the fault occurred must be evaluated for 80 consecutive drive cycles without the fault reoccurring.

A generic scan tool connected to the BMW data link connector (DLC) or OBD II plug can display diagnostic trouble codes (DTCs), along with the conditions associated with the illumination of the MIL. Using a more advanced or BMW-dedicated scan tool, additional proprietary information is normally available.

Scan tool and scan tool display

The complexity of the OBD II system requires that all diagnostics begin by connecting a scan tool to the vehicle. Aftermarket scan tools can be connected to either the 16-pin OBD II plug or the 20-pin BMW DLC in the engine compartment (if installed). Data from the OBD II plug may be limited, depending on scan tool and vehicle.

OBD II standards require that the 16-pin OBD II plug be located within three (3) feet of the driver and not require any tools to access.

- A Starting with June 2000 production, the 20-pin BMW DLC, previously located in the engine compartment, was discontinued. Diagnostic, coding and programming functions are incorporated into the OBD II plug, located under left side of dashboard.

On cars built up to 06 / 2000: when accessing emissions related DTCs through the 16-pin OBD II plug, make sure the BMW 20-pin DLC cap is installed.
