Understanding Family Care Mike Nolan, Gordon Grant, John Keady, 1996

How are the burdens and difficulties of caregiving balanced by the satisfactions experienced How do the demands of caregiving change over time and what are the policy and practice implications of such changes How is a balance achieved between the needs of the caregiver and the cared for person The importance of family informal care both in making a reality of community care policies and in helping to sustain the quality of life of people who require support to remain within their homes is beyond doubt However whilst a considerable research and practice literature has developed in this area over the last ten years there remains much to learn about caring at both conceptual and practice levels There is in particular a need to develop more dynamic models which account for the changing nature of care over time and integrates the perspectives of carer cared for person and the formal service network Based on several years research conducted by the authors Understanding Family Care integrates a number of theories and perspectives in order to provide a more holistic understanding of the needs of carers Emphasis is placed on providing a balanced picture which recognizes both the burdens and satisfactions of caring in addition to the coping efforts that carers employ A new longitudinal model of caring is described and the various stages and processes are explored Although the focus is primarily on the carer the perspectives of the cared for person are not ignored and a model is presented which aids the integration of disparate viewpoints In addition to theoretical and methodological debates implications for policy and practice are fully explored Understanding Family Care is recommended reading for practitioners and managers in the health and social services as well as students of social science nursing gerontology and social work
