

Totipotency : It is the capacity or the potential of living nucleated cell to differentiate and divide to form any other type of cell and thereby a complete new organism.

A cell is totipotent because it has the entire genetic information of the organism in its nucleus. Embryonic animal cells are totipotent and termed as stem cells. Stem cells have great medical applications including cure for diseases.

Know the scientists

A German botanist Matthias Schleiden (1838) examined number of plants and concluded that various tissues of plants are composed of different types cells. At that time, a British zoologist Theodore Schwann (1839) proposed that cells are bound by a thin membrane. He also explained about existence of cell wall as a unique character of plant cell. On the basis of his observation, he proposed that animals and plants are made up of cells and products of cells.

Postulates of modern cell theory,

- All living organisms are made up of cells.
- Living cells arise from pre-existing cells.
- A cell is the structural and functional unit of life.
- Total activities of cells are responsible for activity of an organism.
- Cells show transformation of energy.
- Cells contain nucleic acids; DNA and RNA in the nucleus and cytoplasm.

5.2 Kinds of cells :

Living organisms are grouped into two main categories the Prokaryotes and Eukaryotes. The prokaryotes have simple cellular organization while eukaryotes exhibit high degree of organization.

A. Prokaryotic cells :

The cell in prokaryotes show following main features. It has chemically complex protective cell envelope. However, it does not have well-defined nucleus and other membrane bound cell organelles.

Cell envelope is a three-layered structure with outer glycocalyx, middle cell wall and inner plasma membrane. Glycocalyx is present as either slime layer (loose sheath) or capsule (tough). Bacteria are better observed when stained.

The most followed staining method is 'Gram staining' developed by Danish bacteriologist Hans Christian Gram. The cell wall is made up of peptidoglycan (in Gram positive bacteria) and aurein (in Gram negative bacteria). It gives mechanical strength to the cell. Cell membrane is a phospholipid bilayer. All these structures give protection to the cell and also help in inter-cellular transport. In motile bacteria, either cilia or flagella are found. Both are driven by rotatory movement produced by basal body (which works as motor). Other parts are filament and hook.

Some other surface projections are the tubular pili (which help in inter-cellular communication) and fimbriae (for clinging to support).

The cell membrane shows infoldings called mesosomes, which help in cell wall formation, cellular respiration and DNA replication. Some bacteria especially photosynthetic cyanobacteria show more longer extensions called chromatophores. They carry photosynthetic pigments. The cytoplasm contains dense particles called ribosomes helping in protein synthesis. Ribosomes are described by their sedimentation rate in Svedberg units. Bacterial ribosome are 70S (composed of a larger subunit 50S + smaller subunit 30S).
