Enlightenment and Revolution Vocabulary Activity

Read the passage and complete the activity.

The 17th and 18th centuries are known as the Age of Reason. 17th-century philosophers believed governments should be run based on reason. Enlightenment ideas began with the Scientific Revolution. Scientists began to use observation to test accepted ideas. For example, _____ discovered gravity when he apple fell from the tree, as in the story poem, _____ came up with the heliocentric theory using observation and reason. The Enlightenment theory is the idea that the goal is at the center of the solar system and all the planets revolve around it. _____ proved that the Enlightenment theory was true using mathematics.

For example, the Church had taught the government theory, the idea that the world is at the center and all the planets and the sun revolve around it. The Church did not like to be contradicted, so when _____ wrote about Copernicus's heliocentric theory, the Church had him imprisoned. People began to accept the Enlightenment theory, science, and mathematics, to question the Church's other teachings.

The ideas of the Scientific Revolution shifted to politics. The 17th and 18th centuries were a period of absolute monarchy in Europe and America, that is, a time when kings and queens ruled with almost entirely no limits. _____ advised his people to accept Western ideas and break the rule of the monarchs. In France, _____ advised his subjects and told the citizens of the monarchs. In France, _____ advised his subjects and told the citizens of the monarchs. In France, _____ advised his subjects and told the citizens of the monarchs.

Enlightenment ideas would create revolutions that would overthrow absolute monarchies and governments in the people.

Enlightenment ideas. The French Revolution was an example, and when in the long term the French government would be transformed, a division emerged who would create social and political ideas from all Europe. _____ would finally be declared as leader and the revolution.
