

6. The winning teams of from Round Three will possess the beak variation that is best fit for feeding on that particular type of seed.
7. All trials in each round run for the same length of time. Only those seeds that are successfully removed are counted.

Analysis

1. Those individuals with beaks best adapted for feeding on small seeds remained on the island at the end of Round One while those with "less adapted" beaks migrated to a new island.
2. Competition for food in Round Two should have had an adverse effect on feeding success.
3. There were fewer survivors at the end of Round Three due to increased competition.
4. The following four components of Natural Selection were simulated:
  - a. Variation: different beaks, different size seeds
  - b. Competition: more than one bird feeding at one bowl
  - c. Struggle for survival: each bird trying to get enough food to survive
  - d. Adaptation: particular characteristics of "beaks"
  - e. Environment: students, seeds, dishes are part of environment
  - f. Selecting agent: type of "beak" and / or type of seed available

* Be sure you study the diagram to the left that shows the variations in beaks of Galapagos Island finches. The diagram represents the types of beaks, the function of the beaks, and the type of food the finches eat.
