

Allison Model 250 Turboshaft Engine

The Allison Model 250 is the World's most successful small gas turbine engine. The engine was first produced in 1959, the design horsepower was 250 Bhp. The engine was built at a time when most gas turbine manufacturers thought there would not be a market for such a small power plant and expected this role to be served by piston engines. Over the years the power output of this unit has grown and some units produce as much as 600 Bhp. The Allison 250 is fitted to numerous aircraft including the ubiquitous Bell/Textron Jet Ranger- one of the worlds most successful Helicopters.

The 250 is not without it's flaws, the engine is very complicated in construction and is also relatively fragile. The delicate (But also Munificent) axial compressor is prone to F.O.D. damage if not protected and the engine can be damaged by Hot starts and excessive load. Interestingly the engine is not fitted with any temperature limiting devices.
