

operators in internet portals show their best content available. However, much of the content developed for mobile devices pass unnoticed by users.

Accordingly, we developed a novel approach based on a fully automated algorithm and supervised by intelligent agents that allows through a mobile device look for answers that users demand about labor law. Thus, contrary to what internet systems perform, we seek for answers concrete to problems related with labor law into the labor sector (specifically for Mexico). Furthermore, the rapid emergence and growth of mobile technologies has detonated the development of mobile applications that allow users to satisfy many of their needs from anywhere, from any mobile device and any time. In addition, we take advantage of the fact that for every personal computer currently there are more than six mobile devices. In the United States in 2013, 91% of adults have a cell phone, and of these, 63% use it to connect to internet [1]. This represents an excellent opportunity for new proposals as presented in this paper. New trends in the area of question answering has emerged as a new interesting research domain, various proposals are still based predominantly on processing questions and methodologies for the extraction of answers. Today, question-answering systems are primarily focused on to answer questions from casual users, i.e., from the point of view of a user who does not have expertise in the field of treating search. Therefore, questions have as answer a fact, situation or specific data. Gradually has increased the level of difficulty of questions, for instance, questions whose answer is a list of instances or a definition. For this reason, in this paper we extend the existing approaches to QA systems to deal with domain-specific questions. In particular, our algorithm makes use of a set of laws that apply to a specific domain called "Federal Labor Law", which governs labor relations in Mexico.

2. LABOR LAW AS SPECIFIC DOMAIN

The labor justice system is responsible for effective enforcement of labor laws, together with other instances like the labor inspectorate and trade unions themselves. The malfunctioning of such a system, creates a strong incentive for employers to choose for not respecting the workers' rights, with the expectation that they will desist from claiming them facing the many obstacles that would have to overcome to implement them. Thus, one of the most common problems in our country is the lack of knowledge of laws concerning workers, that is, the information exists but is not divulged properly or adequately. Therefore, we have developed a system based on the search for answers that will allow the system to recover accurate information tailored to user's request, allowing you to always know the laws that apply to your specific case. In addition, we incorporate mobile technologies that can be put into the user's hand a tool that allows you to make your natural language queries and whose goal is to know his rights enshrined by law. Our main objective is modeling and development of a tool to assist in understanding and correct application of our Mexican labor law. With this novel proposal, we solve the needs that demand sectors such as: accounting firms, universities, offices, employees, etc.

3. STATE OF THE ART

The general QA systems have focused all their energy to answer common sense questions. Namely, they often try to answer questions whose answer types are: date, person name, organization and so on. For instance,

When was Trec-10 held? Or Who was the President of USA?

Whose answers type are DATE and PERSON respectively. Recent research has focused on developing systems for question answering to open domain, that is, systems that takes as their source of information a collection of texts on a variety of topics, and solve questions whose
