Architecture by Moonlight Paul E. Fallon, 2015-01-09 When a natural disaster strikes one imposing obstacle always impedes recovery the need to rebuild Not just homes schools and other buildings but also lives must be reconstructed Yet amid the horror there is also the opportunity to build back better to create more resilient buildings and deeper human connections After Haiti s 2010 earthquake architect Paul E Fallon wanted to help rebuild the magic island he had visited the previous summer Over the next three years he made seventeen trips to design and supervise construction of an orphanage and a school in Grand Go ve In the process he confronted the challenges of building in a country with sparse materials and with laborers predisposed toward magic over physics Architecture by Moonlight is about much more than construction however Readers will also experience the many relationships Fallon developed as he balanced the contradictory demands of a boisterous American family constructing a memorial for their deceased daughter and Evangelical missionaries more interested in saving souls than filling bellies Dieunison a wily Haitian orphan captured Fallon's heart and exemplifies both Haiti s tragedy and its indomitable spirit Fallon s personal experience is an eloquent tale of an ensemble of incomplete people struggling in a land of great trial and great promise trying to better understand their place on Earth He reveals how when seemingly different people come together we succeed by seeking our commonality Architecture by Moonlight illustrates our strength to rise above disaster and celebrate recovery perseverance and humanity Rebuilding of the Domestic Architecture of Rual Haiti Nadine Poliard Helms, 2013 Haiti is currently in a position where it must choose the direction of its architecture This study examines the choice between taking a pragmatic approach that would meet domestic needs and assuming a new form of Gingerbread House which could bring financial benefits leaf ii
